

Hays Free Press News-Dispatch

NAVIGATE

Home »

San Marcos cultural center embraces life's 'Simple

0

BY HAYSFREEPRESS ON AUGUST 19, 2013

UNCATEGORIZED

BY JORDAN GASS-POORE'

Drawing inspiration from characters and experiences in her self-described "erratic" life, San Marcos resident Mary Santoyo, joined by her artist father, Luis Santoyo, read from her latest poetry collection, "Simple Things," and introduced an accompanying art exhibit Sunday at Centro Cultural Hispano de San Marcos. The Santoyos collaborated on this 66-page collection that spans decades, providing readers a glimpse into their multicultural and multilingual lives. "I saw this response and how it had kind of gone through generations and I thought it was so interesting..." said Rebecca Bowman, Centro Cultural Hispano de San Marcos volunteer. "(T)he paintings are from Mexico, but she's writing poetry in English. So there's this melding of generations that was just wonderful." Luis Santoyo was born and raised in Mexico City, moving to the U.S. to attend The Art Institute of Chicago. In his more than 75 years of painting, Luis Santoyo's work has reflected the world's changing political, social and cultural climates, a passion he has shared with his daughter since she was a child. Bowman told audience members that although she is friends with Mary Santoyo, she found out about the selfpublication of "Simple Things" only recently. "As soon as I saw this book I said, 'I think this is something that should be shared with the people here in San Marcos,'" said Bowman, a Texas State University Spanish lecturer. Varied emotions and interpretations of each other's work are reflected in "Simple Things," with Luis Santoyo sometimes providing an artistic rendering of his daughter's poetry and vice versa. Luis Santoyo credited his daughter and the book's publication for bringing him out of retirement. "She lit the fire under me," Santoyo said. A stroke of the brush here and a smudge there, Luis Santoyo's artwork, which Bowman described as encompassing aspects of many famous Hispanic painters, inspired Mary Santoyo to write one of her father's favorite poems by her called "Massacres and Brotherhood." Go ahead and help yourself to another helping Make an addition to the money mansion Grab the biggest slice while others fight... About 15 people, including Mary Santoyo's sister and three children, gathered around her in Centro Cultural Hispano de San Marcos' music room as she read some of her poems, including "Autumn," which she wrote as a University of Texas at Austin undergraduate. "(I was) missing home very much and it was kind of a dreary day," Santoyo said. Family plays an important role in Santoyo's work, whether it is commemorating members' absence or celebrating their presence, like the poem "El Grabador." Santoyo said she was inspired to write "El Grabador" by her father's large painting of the same name. "This one is very special," she said. "It was written for him and (his) 75th birthday. ...(He) really struck a cord in me." Santoyo said her father requested that she write a poem in honor of the event. "That was a long time ago," Luis Santoyo told the audience at the poetry reading. "Mucho gusto." Mary Santoyo said she aims to "capture passion's fickle nature" with her poetry. But there was a time when the Austin native worked professionally to capture the fickle nature of humanity's truths. After graduating from college in 1988 with a bachelor's of journalism, Santoyo worked various freelance mass communication jobs, from magazines to research publications and city newspapers, like the Waco Tribune-Herald. Santoyo said she majored in journalism because she believed it would provide a stable income for her to write creatively. The move to San Marcos, after briefly living in Kyle and Buda, brought about a positive physical and mental change for Santoyo, who expressed her appreciation for Centro Cultural Hispano de San Marcos. "I really love this community center, I'm so glad it's here in our town," Santoyo said. Her current favorite poem that she wrote called "Chairs" was reflective of her anticipation of the poetry reading and exhibition, as well as her current state of mind, she said. "I've been here for some time now and never a moment passes that I don't wish the chairs were filled..." read Santoyo from her poem "Chairs." "I feel like this a lot."

COMMENT ON THIS ARTICLE

0 Comments

Sort by Oldest ↕

Add a comment...

 Facebook Comments Plugin

ABOUT AUTHOR

HAYSFREEPRESS

RELATED POSTS

DECEMBER 30, 2019

 0

'No refusal' for New Years Eve in Hays County

DECEMBER 30, 2019

 0

Christmas burglars make off with fireworks

Fireworks restrictions in effect

Comments are closed.

RECENT OPINIONS

DECEMBER, 2019

- DEC 23 Sam Houston the loser in 'archives war'
- DEC 23 Was Trump all that worried about corruption?
- DEC 23 Tired of updating your apps?
- DEC 18 I'm finally appreciating the lessons of Christmas 1969
- DEC 18 French plot to bring Napoleon to Texas

TEXAS DISPOSAL SYSTEMS

NOW HIRING CDL
AND NON CDL DRIVERS

Up to $4,000
Sign On Bonus
for experienced Residential and Site Service Drivers
(restrictions apply)

- Competitive Pay and Benefits • Paid Leave and Holidays
- Weekly Pay • Local Driving Opportunities with Home Driving Time

512-329-1778

www.TexasDisposal.com/Careers

JOHN A. HALL
— & Associates, P.C.

Experts for all your legal needs

Melissa Jewett on County DA to prosecute weed laws despite hemp bill passage

5 MONTHS AGO

Joel Rodriguez, don't think so, as that is not what he said. I guess you missed the part that Hays Co. DA stated "continue to deal with those cases as justice requires, as well as any additional charges under the new law." Stop trying to create your own narrative by putting words in his mouth. Another issue you missed was the part of the actual bill that states the new Hemp law will not go into effect until TX Dept of Ag creates the rules on how to institute this new law. However, it was pointed out to me that I did forget to add in my comment above the Kyle council member, who is also Hays County Chief of Staff, Alex Villalobos, along with the fact he is also a new county constable. Oh.....and let's not forget the Becerra was supposed to name him as the new Hays County Emergency Management Coordinator. With one job with City of Kyle and his THREE NEW JOBS with the county since January, he took the same oath as everyone else did....TWICE.

Joel Rodriguez on County DA to prosecute weed laws despite hemp bill passage

5 MONTHS AGO

I guess you missed the part of the article where the DA is going to treat hemp the same as marijuana?

Kathy Carl on Former newspaper publisher rebuilds out of the ashes

5 MONTHS AGO

So good to see all that has been done, all the donations and time and energy, that has gotten Dad back into a home of his own.

Shannon Shubert on Former newspaper publisher rebuilds out of the ashes

5 MONTHS AGO

Moses, thank you for following dad's story and writing such a great article.

RECENT NEWS

DECEMBER 30, 2019

0

'No refusal' for New Years Eve in Hays County

DECEMBER 30, 2019

0

Christmas burglars make off with fireworks

DECEMBER 30, 2019

0

Fireworks restrictions in effect

DECEMBER 25, 2019

0

Dripping Springs convenience store robbed

DECEMBER 23, 2019

0

Austin issues public health alert over measles

LOCAL EVENTS

December
Mo	Tu	We	Th	Fr	Sa	Su
25	26	27	28	29	30	1
2	3	4	5	6	7	8
9	10	11	12	13	14	15
16	17	18	19	20	21	22
23	24	25	26	27	28	29
30	31	1	2	3	4	5
2018	2019		2020

READER SERVICES

Subscribe

Contact Us

Current Issue

ADVERTISING

Classifieds

Place a Classified Ad

Advertising Rate Sheet

STAY CONNECTED

Twitter

Instagram

Facebook