

Fashion With a Cause

Lori Felt is known by those around her for her optimism and positive attitude. She believes everyone has a purpose and creating art and fashion design is hers. Her personality shines through in her artwork, which is always vibrant and joyous.

After studying at Syracuse University, where she received her B.F.A., she discovered her passion for art. Felt realized that her artwork could bring joy to those around her, so she turned that talent and passion for creating art into a thriving business with a mission to enhance lives and restore hope to families coping with cancer.

This multi-media creative artist launched her fashion apparel design business because she believes that her art can be a vehicle to pay it forward by generating awareness and the funds for three causes that have touched her life: children with cancer, breast cancer research, and autism.

She leverages her skills as a formally trained artist and designer of more than 25 years, working with talented graphic designers, to develop custom-designed goods and original artwork for socially conscious retailers and nonprofits.

She strategically picks each nonprofit, knowing that by collaborating they could truly make a difference. This passion stems from her innate ability and desire to make the world a better place.
